PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

To the Honorable The Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Sociedad Maritima San Nicolas S.A., the petitioner above named, prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment and decree of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit entered in the above case on June 29, 1960.

Opinion Below

The opinion of the United States District Court for the Southern District (App. 16-20)* is reported officially at 175 F. Supp. 1 and unofficially at 1959 A. M. C. 2360. The opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit (App. 3-15) has not yet been reported.

* Reference in parentheses is to pages of the appendix herein.

Jurisdiction

The judgment and decree of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit (App. 1-2) was made and entered on June 29, 1959. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U. S. C. (1254(1)).

Questions Presented

The petitioner is a Panamanian corporation which owns the S. S. "Euryviades", a vessel registered under the laws and flag of the Republic of Liberia. Respondent, a Portuguese seaman, left the vessel at Galveston, Texas. Thereafter he filed a libel against the vessel and the petitioner in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, seeking overtime and vacation pay allegedly due him under provisions of the Panamanian Labor Code and penalties under 46 U. S. C. (596 and 597 for each day such overtime and vacation pay remained unpaid. Petitioner excepted to the libel on the ground that the law of the Republic of Liberia and not the Republic of Panama applied. Respondent cross-moved for leave to file an amended libel, so as to more fully set forth the Panamanian law and plead an alternative cause of action under the law of Liberia. The proposed amended libel was substantially the same as the original libel except that another cause of action was pleaded in the alternative, seeking overtime pay allegedly due under a provision of the Liberian Labor Law. In the third cause of action respondent again invoked the penalty provisions of 46 U. S. C. (596 and 597 for each day that the payments due under either the Panamanian Labor Law or, in the alternative, the Liberian Labor Law, remained unpaid. The Acting Consul General for the Republic of Liberia in New York certified that he would exercise jurisdiction and determine the claim in accordance with the provisions of a treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Liberia. The District Court sustained the exceptions to the original libel and, in his discretion, denied the cross motion for leave to amend and dismissed the libel without leave to plead over. Upon appeal, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit sustained the District Court's dismissal of the original libel and its denial of leave to plead over again the first cause of action in the Panamanian Law but reversed the decree of the District Court with instructions to grant leave to file the amended libel save for the first cause of action.

The questions presented are:

(1) Is the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts mandatory in actions brought by foreign seamen under 46 U. S. C. §596 or 597 against a foreign vessel or shipowner for benefits based on foreign labor statutes?

(2) Are the Federal Courts without any discretionary power to deny leave to amend a foreign seaman's libel or complaint whenever the proposed amended libel or complaint alleges a claim under 46 U. S. C. §596 or 597?

(3) Are the Federal Courts denied, in all cases wherein §596 or 597 are invoked, the power to permit the exercise of jurisdiction by foreign consular authorities over claims brought by foreign seamen under the laws of foreign nations against foreign vessels or shipowners, even though the consular authorities expressly agree to adjudicate the claim under the provisions of a United States treaty concluded subsequent to the enactment of §§596 and 597a granting to such consular authorities concurrent jurisdiction over wage claims?

(4) Is 46 U. S. C. §§596 or 597 applicable to claims of foreign seamen, which are a) based solely upon a foreign labor statute of general applicability, b) not made at the discharge port or while the vessel is in a harbor of the United States and c) not asserted until several years after the termination of employment?

(5) Is a seaman's claim, derived solely from a foreign labor statute applicable to workmen in general, justiciable in admiralty?

Treaty and Statutes Involved

The treaty and statutory provisions involved are Article X of the Convention Between The United States of America and The Republic of Liberia, 51 Stat. 1751, and 46 U. S. C. §§596 and 597. They are printed in the Appendix infra (App. 21-23).

Statement

The original libel was filed in the United States District Court for the Southern District on October 26, 1956. In the first cause of action the respondent alleged that he served aboard the vessel from April 8, 1952 until he left the vessel in Galveston, Texas on September 22, 1956 and that he was entitled to overtime in the amount of $2,207.15 and vacation pay in the amount of $323.12 under the Panamanian Labor Code, which was allegedly "assimilated" to his contract of employment. The second cause of action alleged that by virtue of 46 U. S. C. §§ 596 and 597, respondent was entitled to two days' pay for each day such "wages" remained unpaid. When the petitioner herein appeared and excepted to the libel on the ground that the law of Liberia, not Panama, applied to the case, respondent conceded that the exceptions were well taken on the basis of a previous decision of the District Court, and cross-moved for leave to amend the libel so as to more fully plead the Panamanian law as well as an alternative claim under a Liberian statute. The proposed amended libel alleged three causes of action. The first cause of action was identical to the first cause of action in the original libel except for the addition of paragraphs Sixth, Seventh and Eighth which the District Court and the Court below considered immaterial variations. A second cause of action was pleaded in the alternative, seeking $3,510.54, for overtime pay alone, under §51 of the Liberian Labor Law, a provision of general applicability to "workmen". The third cause of action alleged that by virtue of petitioner's failure to pay such "wages", he was entitled under 46 U. S. C. §§ 596 and 597 to "two days' pay for each day that the said wages shall continue to remain unpaid". The Acting Consul General for the Republic of Liberia in New York issued a certificate (R. 31)* stating that he was informed and willing to exercise jurisdiction and hear and determine this wage claim in accordance with the provisions of a Treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Liberia. In opposition to libellant's cross-motion for leave to amend, respondent produced a statement signed by libellant at the time he left the vessel at Galveston stating he had been paid all wages due him (R. 32). Respondent does not deny that he received all his regular monthly wages under his articles of employment.

Reasons for Granting the Writ

1. The decision of the Court below is directly in conflict with the decision of the Third Circuit Court of Appeals in The Estrella, 102 F. 2d 736, cert. denied, 306 U. S. 658, 59 S. Ct. 775 (1939). This conflict was conceded in the Court below as follows:

> "The question whether the district court may decline to exercise jurisdiction in such a case has provoked a difference of opinion between courts of appeals. In The Estrella, 102 F. 2d 736 (3d Cir. 1938), cert. denied, 306 U. S. 658 (1939), the Third Circuit held it may. Biggs, C. J., dissenting; in Lakos v. Saliaris, supra, the Fourth Circuit held it may not. We agree with the Fourth Circuit and with the dissenting opinion in the Third."

In The Estrella the Third Circuit held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to take jurisdiction of a wage claim brought under 46 U. S. C. 597 by alien seamen against a Norwegian vessel on the grounds that Norwegian consular officers could adjudicate the controversy under Article XXII of a Treaty between the Kingdom of Norway and the United States, 47 Stat., Part 2, 2135, 2152 Treaty Series 852. Article XXII of the Treaty with Norway is identical to Article X of the Convention Between the United States and Liberia Respecting Consular Officers, 54 Stat. 1756 (1939). Judge Biggs dissented from the majority opinion in The Estrella, not, as suggested by the Court below, on the ground that jurisdiction was mandatory, but rather on the grounds that the District Court's decision to decline jurisdiction was premature and an improper exercise of its discretion. The rule in The Estrella case was in conformity with prior decisions rendered in similar cases, e.g. The Anahitsis, 11 F. 2d 235 (D. C. E. D. Pa. 1926), and The Prince Paul, 32 F. Supp. 5 (E. D. N. Y., 1940). The contrary view that the District Court did not have any discretion was taken in Lalos v. Saharis, 116 F. 2d 440 (4th Cir. 1940), which opinion was followed by the Court below.

The libellants in The Estrella case petitioned this Court for a writ of certiorari on the ground that jurisdiction was mandatory. This Court must now resolve these conflicts by deciding whether the District Courts are compelled to take jurisdiction in all cases in which 596 or 597 are invoked under comparable circumstances. It should also resolve the further related issue posed by the decision of the Court below when it denied to the District Court the exercise of any discretion at all in disposing of a motion for leave to amend wherein libellant, almost three years after the filing of his original libel seeking vacation pay and overtime under the Panamanian law and penalties under 596 and 597, sought to amend the libel so as claim either vacation and overtime pay computed under Panamanian law or, alternatively, overtime pay only under the Panamanian law, together with penalties under 596 and 597 of "two days pay for each day that the said wages shall continue to remain unpaid".

2. The Court below in construing 46 U. S. C. §§596 and 597 and determining the applicability of the statutes to foreign seamen, has drawn several erroneous conclusions which are in conflict with prior decisions, including prior decisions of the Court below. The practical effect of the decision is to compel the District Courts to take jurisdiction over a class of cases that could not have been within the contemplation or intendment of the Congress at the time it enacted the penalty provisions of §§596 and 597. For example, it had generally been accepted that the rights of foreign seamen under §§596 and 597 were related to the presence of the foreign vessel in a harbor of the United States. Thus the Second Circuit Court of Appeals in Transportes Maritimos Do Estado v. Almeida, 5 F. 2d 151 (2d Cir. 1925), relying on the decision of this court in Strathcona S. S. Co. v. Dillon, 252 U. S. 348, reversed a District Court judgment on a foreign seaman's wage claim brought under §596 and remanded the cause with instructions to dismiss the complaint, holding, per Judge Hough at 152-153, as follows:

> "He asserts a right of suit under the cited sections of the Revised Statutes; but those statutes are drawn primarily with reference to vessels of the United States. It is solely by virtue of the proviso (supra) that Almeida and his like have any rights, and those rights are extended by the proviso that this section shall apply to seamen on foreign vessels while in harbors of the United States."

"The history of the amendments to the Revised Statutes by what is commonly called the 'La Follette Act' (38 Stat. 1164) is well known, and the legislation was upheld in Strathearn, etc., Co. v. Dillon, 252 U. S. 348, 40 S. Ct. 350, 64 L. Ed. 607, by holding that 'we have no doubt as to the authority of Congress to pass a statute of this sort, applicable to foreign vessels in our ports and controlling the employment and payment of seamen as a condition of the right of such foreign vessels to enter and use the ports of the United States'. In the same decision (page 357), the court speaks of the right of recovering wages under these sections as one given to the seaman while the ship is in a harbor of the United States. To the same effect, The Italia, 257 F. 712, 168 C. C. A. 662.

"This is a wage claim—it can be nothing else for purposes of jurisdiction. As a suit upon a broken Portuguese contract instituted by one alien against another, it has no place on the docket of the District Court. But as a wage claim it belongs to a class of demands which can only be promoted by seamen on foreign vessels while their vessel is in a harbor of the United States."

See also the opinion of the Court below in The Italia, 257 F. 712 (2d Cir. 1919). This principle, based upon the construction of the statute and this Court's opinion in Strathearn S.S. Co. v. Dillon, 252 U. S. at 356-357 was followed through the years, e.g. in The Strathfoyle, 15 F. 2d 210 (D. Oregon, 1926) and Stavrides v. Am. Parana-La Plata Navigation, 90 F. Supp. 187 (S. D. N. Y., 1950). But a few months after the principle was affirmed by the U. S. District Court for the Southern District in Fuller v. Newfoundland-St. Lawrence Shipping Ltd. Proc., 24 F. R. D. 9, wherein the Court stated as follows, at page 11:

> ". . . As we read the statute and reported cases discussing jurisdiction it would seem that the court lacks jurisdiction for claims under 596 and 597 unless the ship is in a United States harbor and, perhaps for venue purposes, within the district at the time suit was started, or at least during its pendency . . ."

The decision of the Court below overrules the requirement that the vessel be in a United States port at the time the suit is commenced and authorizes suit in any District Court at any time provided only that the foreign seaman leave his vessel in a United States port.

The Court below also broadened the scope of 596 and 597 to encompass claims that are not founded upon the customary shipping articles or the mariners' contract with the ship or any other agreement related to service about the vessel, but rather founded on foreign statutes similar to our Fair Labor Standards Acts and Wage laws. The legislative history of the statutes in question, particularly when read with 46 U. S. C. 563-578, does not warrant the extension of the penalty provisions to such claims, nor does it warrant a broadening of the word "wages" in such penal statutes to include claims for overtime based solely on such foreign labor statutes.

The Court below also held that a declaration for payment was not required in order to obtain recovery of the penalty for withholding wages and that a seaman could seek two days' penalty "wages" for each day "overtime" payments under a foreign labor statute were withheld even though such payments were claimed for the first time three years after the seaman left the ship in question. The Court's decision in sustaining, as a matter of law, the sufficiency of the third cause of action in the proposed amended libel for penalties under 46 U.S.C. 596 and 597, is contrary to the principle established in Cities Service Co. v. Peerless, 281 U.S. 72 and Wilson v. United States, 291 U.S. 23, and applied in The Thomas Barlum, 21 F. 2d 672 (2 Cir. 1927), Panamanian v. Cities Service Co., 85 F. Supp. 958 (S.D.N.Y. 1949), Lipka v. Compagnie Belge Maritime du Congo, 85 F. Supp. 715 (S.D.N.Y. 1949), and 2 Go F. 2d 582 (2 Cir. 1950), and Vallejo v. Flota, 151 F. Supp. 180 (S.D.N.Y. 1956), that specific action will be only who needlessly withholds payment is arbitrary or willful.

3. In holding that the District Court was mistaken in ruling that a seaman's claim for overtime pay based solely upon a foreign statute applying to workmen generally was not a maritime claim, the Court below merely states without further explanation that the seaman's relationship to the ship was the critical consideration". There was no suggestion as to the material to meet in which a claim based, not on a mariners' contract, but on a foreign overtime statute applying to workmen in general, was related to the sea. The Court in support of its holding referred to The Panama, 27 Fed. 118, 123 (S.D.N.Y. 1921) which in a suit by a seaman for personal injuries sustained while on a ship which was not in navigation, but was undergoing repairs in dry dock, held that a charterers' contract of carriage was considered to be a maritime tort and then noted that such wages [illegible] were properly collected by the Court on

Bourgeois v. Atlantic Maritime Co., 220 F. 2d 152 (2d Cir. 1954) and Kinkead v. Occidental Company, 250 F. 2d 582 (2d Cir. 1958). It then reasoned that

> If jurisdiction in admiralty was not there discussed this was doubtless because the rule of La Bourgogne, 210 U. S. 95, 138 (1908), that admiralty will take jurisdiction over tort claims arising from foreign statutes, was thought to make it unnecessary to discuss the similar problem in wage cases.

We do not think the lack of discussion of such issue in the cited cases significant since a claim for personal injuries was joined with the wage claim in the Kinkead case and in the Bourgeois case, 220 F. 2d at 154, expressly limited its consideration to the applicability of the Panama statute of limitations. Nor is the Court below warranted in concluding that this lacking discussion was doubtless because the rule with respect to maritime tort claims arising from foreign statutes was thought to make it unnecessary to discuss the similar problem in wage cases. On the contrary the Second Court has made it clear that such wage claims are [illegible] This the Second Court in the Southern Pacific Co. of New York case, Navigation Co. v. [illegible], 2 F. 2d 2[illegible] F. 2d 2[illegible] Court in a footnote [illegible] the Panama Canal Tolls Case, 13 F. S. 6[illegible] 295 U. S. 602, [illegible] at page 11 involving additional wages due under the Panamanian law, said to be pendent on the other, would seem to be quite floating in thin air. We cannot, therefore, dispossess it on the theory that once having jurisdiction we should resolve the other claims to do substantial justice. The lis has disappeared.

"Not being pendent to anything and diversity being absent, the only other possible justification for jurisdiction would be that it is in reality a proceeding in admiralty but incorrectly 'labelled'. But neither at trial nor after has plaintiff suggested this, and his counsel is a most experienced and competent lawyer in this type of litigation. Perhaps the reason is that he is not suing on a maritime contract but rather for penalties under a Panamanian Fair Labor statute and the admiralty would not have jurisdiction."

The District Court's assumption undoubtedly would have stronger conviction in a suit brought under s51 of the Liberian Labor Code which, unlike the Panamanian Fair Labor Statute, does not make any reference to seamen.

The decision of the Court below in extending admiralty jurisdiction to a class of claims similar to that alleged under the Liberian overtime statute is erroneous and in conflict with the frequently quoted principles of admiralty jurisdiction stated by Judge Story in Peterson v. Bois, 7 Fed. Cas. 118, 111, No. 3776 (C. C. D. Mass. 1815).

4. Clearly the questions presented are of importance in determining the scope and application of 46 U. S. C. § 596 and 597 and the Treaty rights of foreign consular officers in the administration of the affairs of vessels registered under their laws. Settlement of these questions by this Court is in the public interest and of concern to foreign governments, their consular officers, and perhaps particularly to the United States District Courts, confronted as they are with a mounting volume of cases involving the application of foreign law to disputes between aliens, with attendant problems of foreign tongues, translations and interpretations of foreign law, including recently enacted foreign legislation. Couto v. Eloita Mercante Del Estado, 277 F. 2d 664, 667 (2d Cir. 1960). This Court in Benz v. Compania Naviera Hidalgo, 353 U. S. 138 referred to the foreign proviso of § 597 and voiced its sensitivity to extensions of the foreign applicability of United States statutes, noting at page 147, per Mr. Justice Clark, as follows:

> "And so here such a 'sweeping provision' as to foreign applicability was not specified in the Act. The seamen agreed in Germany to work on the foreign ships under British articles. We cannot read into the Labor Management Relations Act an intent to change the contractual provisions made by these parties. For us to run interference in such a delicate field of international relations there must be present the affirmative intention of the Congress clearly expressed. It alone has the facilities necessary to make fairly such an important policy decision where the possibilities of international discord are so evident and retaliative action so certain. . . ."

This Court recently reiterated again in Romero v. International Terminal Operating Co., 358 U. S. 354, 382, 383, its concern about extending United States laws, in the absence of a clear Congressional direction, to "foreign events, foreign ship and foreign seamen" and spoke of the necessity for

> "... due recognition of our self-regarding respect for the relevant interests of foreign nations in the regulation of maritime commerce as part of the legitimate concern of the international community..."

We would note that if jurisdiction is mandatory in these cases the practical effect would be a denial to the foreign consular officers of their authority to determine such disputes, because their decisions would not be binding upon the seamen who would still have access to the Federal Courts if dissatisfied with the determination of the consular officers. Our courts would then be placed in the impossible position of being asked to impugn and invalidate the decisions of consuls of friendly nations, acting, not only under the authority of their government, but under treaties between their governments and the United States of America.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above it is respectfully submitted that this petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.
